Anti-social Behaviour, Crime and Policing Bill

The Anti-social Behaviour, Crime and Policing Bill completed the commons committee stage on 16 July 2013.

New Subject Access Code of Practice

The ICO has published its new Subject Access Code of Practice. The guidance brings together all of our previous advice on this subject along with additional material and aims to help organisations deal with subject access requests in a timely and efficient manner. During 2012/13 the ICO received more complaints about subject access requests than any other topic, with over 6,000 complaints handled during this period. One in six of these complaints related to the financial sector, while one in ten related to the health sector.

Further FOI changes from September

From 1 September there will be a change to the definition of 'public authority' in section 6 of the FOI Act, which will include not only companies wholly owned by one public authority, as is the position at present, but also those wholly owned by more than one "relevant public authority". The order that commences these, and the datasets provisions is The Protection of Freedoms Act 2012 \(Commencement No. 8\) Order 2013 – ref 2013 No. 1906 (C. 81).

Surveillance camera code of practice comes into force

A new code of practice which will encourage more effective use of CCTV cameras comes into force. The code sets out guidelines for CCTV and Automatic Number Plate Recognition (ANPR) systems to ensure their use is open and proportionate and that they are able to capture quality images that give police a better chance to catch criminals and cut crime.

Improving local responses to alcohol-related ill health

A new tool developed by Public Health England to support the improvement of effective local responses to alcohol related ill health – the Alcohol risk assessment tool is now available.

Police collaboration unit failings highlight DP issues involved in collaborative working

The ICO has issued three police forces in the East Midlands with enforcement notices following the theft of a number of unencrypted laptops belonging to the East Midlands Collaboration Unit. The collaboration unit was used by all three forces and during investigation it was found that there was no formal basis for sharing the information in place and that the forces showed no apparent recognition that they were still responsible for the data they were processing. As well as issuing enforcement notices to Leicestershire, Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire Police, the ICO has raised concerns with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) who will now be reviewing and updating guidance to police forces on collaborative working. The case is discussed in a blog written by ICO Strategic Liaison Group Manager for Public Security, Meagan Mirza. In the blog Meagan explains that before setting up a collaborative unit, “all parties involved should understand who is responsible for what and whose policies are being followed”.

Landmark ANPR decision highlights need for proportionality

The use of ANPR cameras is an issue that continues to attract interest from the public and the media. To comply with the Data Protection Act organisations must ensure that the use of such cameras is proportionate to the problem it is trying to address. On 24 July the ICO issued an enforcement notice to Hertfordshire Constabulary following a detailed investigation into the force’s use of an extensive ANPR system surrounding the town of Royston. The scheme, regularly referred to as the ‘Ring of Steel’, effectively means that it is impossible to drive in and out of the town without a record being kept of your journey. The notice was issued after it became clear that the force had not carried out a proper privacy impact assessment, or similar such assessment, to show that the use of the cameras was justifiable. The force must now review the use of the scheme’s cameras to ensure they comply with the DPA.

EU data protection regulators propose profiling definition

The ICO has been working with its European counterparts to examine the feasibility of developing a definition and related article provision on profiling within the proposed draft EU

General Data Protection Regulation. Profiling has found its way into many areas of life in the form of consumer profiles, movement profiles, user profiles and social profiles. The rapid development of technology and the move towards big data techniques allow actors in both the public and private sectors to access and use multiple data sources to build up a detailed picture of individuals' preferences and make predictions based on such preferences.

Firms forging partnerships to tackle reoffending

More than 150 organisations looking to bid for offender rehabilitation contracts have attended two events aimed at bringing small and large providers together to forge successful partnerships in reducing reoffending.

Communications training needed for Manchester police

Police officers are failing to engage with the public politely, a new report suggests. Officers from Greater Manchester Police (GMP) underwent communications training as part of a College of Policing study, which found that this resulted in higher satisfaction from the public.

New guidance on FOI dataset provisions

The dataset amendments to the FOI Act come into force on 1 September 2013. The ICO has published a comprehensive guidance document setting out the details of these new provisions and a blog from ICO Head of Policy, Steve Wood, discussing the new changes.

The dataset amendments in brief:

- When a public authority is providing information in response to a request, if that information is a dataset, then the public authority has to provide it in a re-usable form so far as reasonably practicable.
- If the public authority owns the copyright in the dataset and it's not a Crown copyright work, then it also has to licence the dataset for re-use.
- It may charge a fee for licensing re-use of the dataset.
- The public authority also has to make requested datasets available for re-use under its publication scheme, unless it's not appropriate to do so.

The amendments are about information that can be released. Exemptions under the FOI Act still apply: there is no new right of access to any information that is not currently available, and there is no requirement for a public authority to create new information.

- As well as our guidance, the key documents that public authorities need to read are:
- Section 102 of the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012, which contains the text of the new provisions.
- The new Section 45 Code of Practice on datasets.
- The new Freedom of Information \(Release of Datasets for Re-use\) \(Fees\) Regulations 2013.

Home Office monitored over timeliness of FOI responses

The ICO is currently monitoring the Home Office, Sussex Police and South Tyneside Council over the timeliness of their responses to FOI requests. The monitoring period will examine the authorities' responses to FOI requests received between 1 July and 30 September 2013. Failure to show signs of improvement during this period may result in enforcement action. Following the monitoring period held between 1 January and 31 March 2013, Wirral Borough Council has also been issued with an undertaking requiring them to improve the timeliness of their responses. The action follows unsatisfactory progress during the monitoring period, with less than 75% of requests still failing to be responded to within the time limit of 20 working days.

Planning ahead - Mark Carney, the Governor of the Bank of England, unveiled “forward guidance” for the economy. The Inflation Report states that the Bank would not consider raising interest rates until unemployment fell to below 7 per cent.

The Prime Minister, David Cameron, announced a £160 million investment in cycling, with safe cycle paths to be built in eight cities and four national parks (Times; Guardian; BBC Online).

£77m cycling fund for eight cities

A £77m fund will boost cycling in eight English cities, Prime Minister David Cameron has announced. The support will help councils to improve existing networks and create new ones to make cycling easier and safer. Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Newcastle, Bristol, Cambridge, Oxford and Norwich will share the funding, and four national parks will receive an additional share of £17m. Combined with local funding (see below for details), the new funding amounts to £148m between now and 2015.

ONS finds 73% of UK adults use the internet everyday

36 million adults in the UK were daily internet users in 2013, new figures from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) show. This is more than double the number of users from 2006, when comparable records began.

Brandon Lewis announces 100 community pubs are saved

Community Pubs Minister Brandon Lewis raised a glass to announce that 100 community pubs have been listed as assets of community value helping to safeguard their futures. The Community Right to Bid gives communities the opportunity to nominate an asset to be included on a list of assets of community value which delays the sale should a treasured local assets be put up for sale.

The Cabinet Office will reform the procurement of government IT services to allow for greater participation of small and medium enterprises (SMEs). Whilst currently fewer than 10 IT companies account for up to 80 per cent of all government business due to lengthy and expensive procurement processes, under a revised accelerated process around 50 companies will be preselected to bid for work (FT).

White Paper on Pooling of Non-Domestic Rates and Redistribution to Local Authorities

The National Audit Office audited the financial statements of the pooling of non-domestic rates and redistribution to local authorities in England account for the year ended 31 March 2013. Under the Local Government Finance Act 1988, national non-domestic rates are to be paid to the Secretary of State who is then required to redistribute them to local authorities in accordance with the methodology set out each year in the Local Government Finance Report \(England\). The non-domestic rates are then pooled and redistributed.
