Motion to the House of TREATMENT OF 17 YEAR OLDS IN POLICE CUSTODY

That this House condemns the exclusion of 17 year olds from the specific protection given to juveniles in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which remains inconsistent with domestic and international legislation which states that a human is a child until the age of 18 and that 17 year olds in police custody are consequently not provided with an appropriate adult as a matter of course; notes with great sadness the tragic consequences this has had on the Thornber and Lawton family whose 17 year old sons Edward Thornber, who was arrested for the possession of cannabis, and Joe Lawton, arrested for drink driving, committed suicide as a result; and calls on the Government for a change of law so that 17 year olds are treated as children when arrested and in police custody, as requested by a 52,000 signature petition presented to 10 Downing Street on 28 March 2013.

2. Policing and crime key developments

Police powers and procedures in England and Wales 2011/12

Figures were published on 18 April on a range of police powers and procedures. The National Statistics release contains figures on Arrests, Detentions, Road Checks, Intimate Searches, Stops and Searches, Breath Tests and Fixed Penalty Notices. These statistics show that:

- There were 1.2 million persons arrested by the police for recorded crimes in 2011/12, down 9% on 2010/11.
- The number of recorded crimes decreased by 4% over the same period.
- The police stopped and searched 1.1 million persons and/or vehicles under section 1 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act (PACE) in 2011/12, 7% less than in 2010/11. Resultant arrests fell by 6%. Stops and searches on suspicion of drugs accounted for 50% of the overall total.
- They also made 46,961 stops and searches in anticipation of violence (under section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994), down 25% on 2010/11.
- The police issued 1.5 million fixed penalty notices for motoring offences in 2011, down 18% on 2010. Speed limit offences accounted for over half of them.
- The police carried out 685,992 screening breath tests during 2011, 7% fewer than in 2010. The number of positive or refused tests also fell by 4% and accounted for 12% of the total.

The statistical release, 'Police Powers and Procedures, England and Wales 2011/12' contains statistics at police force area level, with analyses by age and gender. There is also a limited analysis of arrests and stops and searches by ethnicity of those arrested or stopped. A more comprehensive analysis will be published by the Ministry of Justice, in its next 'Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System' release, in the autumn of 2013.

National Stalking Awareness Day: April 18th

National Stalking Awareness Day exists to raise awareness about the crime of stalking. Each year we have a different 'theme' and because of the recent stalking law changes, this year's focus will be 'Know the Law, Use the Law'. Currently the law is slightly different in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland but importantly stalking behaviour is against the law across the UK.

Women's Aid: Digital stalking: a guide to technology risks for victims

Women's Aid teamed up with national stalking charity Network for Surviving Stalking to launch a practical guide for victims of stalking. 'Digital stalking: a guide to technology risks for victims' is an important resource for all stalking victims, including the many survivors of domestic violence who are being stalked by an ex-partner. It explains the wide range of technological risks for those being stalked, including use of Spyware on personal computers, tracking devices on mobile phones and tracking of information through social networking sites.

Institute of Public Policy Research: Criminal justice reform: A revolution on the American right

The politics of crime in the United States are undergoing a remarkable change. After years of being reliably 'tough on crime', conservatives are now at the forefront of the movement for criminal justice reform. A recent article in the Washington Monthly, 'The Conservative War on Prisons', summed up this dramatic change succinctly: 'Right-wing operatives have decided that prisons are a lot like schools: hugely expensive, inefficient, and in need of root-and-branch reform.'

Prisoners are to face losing automatic access to gym equipment, games consoles and other perks under plans for a new regime of "tough justice", being finalised by the Justice Secretary, Chris Grayling MP.

Mr Grayling plans to raise the threshold of "good behaviour", requiring prisoners to work or enrol in education programmes to receive the privileges, in order to ensure that the justice system "properly punishes as well as reforms" (Times; Independent).

Communities and Local Government Select Committee – Decentralisation: an assessment of progress

Howard League for Penal Reform: Outlined that on International Women's Day this year there were just over 4,000 women in prison in England, making up just 5% of the prison population. However the statistics within this minority group are: 81% are convicted of non-violent crimes, over half are known substance abusers, and 53% of women in custody have experienced emotional, physical or sexual abuse in their pasts.

Women in custody also have a high self-harm and attempted suicide rate that goes hand in hand with the large percentage of women in custody with mental health issues.

Government must take responsibility for VAT fraud, says Lords committee

A cap on certain benefit payments, set to be imposed across England, Scotland and Wales in July, is to be rolled out in four London boroughs from 15 April.

Jobseeker's allowance, income support, child and housing benefit are among the credits that will contribute to a cap of £500 a week for couples and lone parents and £350 for single people in Haringey, Enfield, Croydon and Bromley (Guardian; Independent; BBC Online).

The Department for Work and Pensions has disclosed that the money likely to be saved from the benefit cap, introduced in four London boroughs yesterday, is less than half the amount originally envisaged by the Treasury.

A spokesman for the Department said that because the Government had revised the number of families affected by the cap from 55,000 to 40,000, with the resulting savings falling from £270 million to £110 million in the first year (Times).

Four out of every five companies believe that efforts by the Government to remove barriers to job creation are having no impact on their business, according to a survey of 700 companies by Barclays Corporate.

Businesses are also divided over the likely impact of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, George Osborne MP's, "shares for workers' rights" plan, with a third of businesses believing that the scheme will not be popular among small and medium sized enterprises (FT).

Enterprise zones set up across Britain by the Government in 2011 have so far produced 1,700 jobs, significantly short of the 30,000 target by 2015.

Keith Wakefield, Labour leader of Leeds City Council, said that "we have got the zones in the right place but we do not have the demand" and that there need to be greater incentives to "persuade businesses to invest" (FT).

Increased spending by shoppers and a revival in the housing market will lead to a minor economic recovery in the UK this year, according to financial services firm Ernst and Young.

The ITEM Club, Ernst and Young's quarterly economic audit, predicts that the economy will expand by 0.6 per cent this year, with the recession in Europe and a lack of business confidence decreasing the likelihood of growth driven by a rise in exports (FT).

Job losses in the public sector will accelerate in the run up to the next General Election, with a further 340,000 posts expected to be cut, according to a study by The Jobs Economist think tank.

Dr John Philpott, Director of the think tank, says that based on the current projections from the Office for Budget Responsibility, the proportion of people employed in the public sector by 2018 will be lower than at any time since the Second World War (Telegraph print only).

The number of households in England will increase by 2.2 million over the 10 years to 2021, with a rise of 221,000 in London alone, a rate more than double that of the North and Midlands, according to the Office for National Statistics (ONS).

Across England last year 115,000 new houses were completed, however the ONS projects that demand for households will increase at nearly twice this rate (Times).

The House of Commons will be debating Transport Committee reports into road safety and low carbon vehicles on Thursday 25th April.

Public sector pay has grown three times faster than that in the private sector, according to the latest figures from the Office for National Statistics.

Private sector workers' pay rose by just 0.5 per cent between December 2012 and February 2013, compared to the same period last year, whilst public sector workers saw a 1.7 per cent increase over the same period (Telegraph).

Grayling explains review of cautions

The Secretary of State for Justice, together with the Home Secretary and the Attorney General, on 3rd April launched 2013 a review of simple cautions. This will examine the way in which simple cautions are currently used, and consider the need for any changes to policy or practice to ensure that there is transparency, accountability and public confidence in the use of simple cautions as a disposal. The review will report to criminal justice ministers by the end of May 2013 and any government proposals stemming from consideration of this will be brought forward in due course.

Minister explains consultation on Improving the Code of Practice for Victims of Crime

Written Ministerial Statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Justice (Mrs Helen Grant): On 29 March, the Government launched the Improving the Code of Practice for Victims of Crime consultation. The Government wants to do all it can to ensure the right services and support is in place to help victims through what is often a sensitive, worrying and emotional time. Last year we published our response to the 'Getting it right for victims and witnesses' consultation in which we made a commitment to revise the current Code of Practice for Victims of Crime ('Victims' Code').

Independent Police Complaints Commission

In 2011, through the Police Reform and Social Responsibility Act, the Government freed up the IPCC to deal with the most serious complaints and gave the IPCC more flexibility in the way it carries out its administrative functions. In 2012, the Police (Complaints and Conduct) Act gave the IPCC two new powers to assist in the investigation of allegations of police wrongdoing in connection with the Hillsborough disaster. These powers will also have wider application to other cases. The Government intends to legislate to further strengthen the IPCC's powers as soon as Parliamentary time allows. In this context the Government welcomes, and is grateful for, the support of the Committee on legislating quickly with the Police (Complaints and Conduct) Act 2012.

A statement from the Home Secretary regarding an error in the way the Serious Organised Crime Agency (SOCA) has captured and reported the number of outgoing European Arrest Warrants (EAW) that have been issued since 2009/10. The Chair of SOCA has assured the Home Secretary that there is no evidence to suggest that this error in data capture has had any operational impact on the way in which EAWs have been processed by SOCA, or any other part of the criminal justice system, or therefore on public protection. The Home Secretary has initiated HMIC to undertake an audit.

House of Commons briefing note on speed cameras

The paper outlines the legislative basis for speed cameras, the types of cameras in use and includes information on their funding. It also discusses issues surrounding their efficacy. As part of the National Safety Camera Partnership programme, police forces round the country were able to form a partnership with the local traffic authority and magistrates court. A partnership funding scheme was made available nationally in August 2001. This followed a pilot scheme in eight police force areas. There are now over 30 such Partnerships in England and the Road Casualty Reduction Partnership in Wales. Road safety funding is devolved in both Wales and Scotland. When the funding criteria changed in 2007 the Partnerships in England widened their scope and are now involved in all forms of road safety (and as such many no longer mention 'cameras' in their name). It is a matter for them to decide how they manage their budgets and what they spend their money on – whether that be cameras or other road safety initiatives such as traffic calming or driver education. A number of local areas have switched off their speed cameras over the past couple of years.

Mental Health Foundation: Losing track of time: Dementia and an ageing prison population.

Dementia presents a looming problem for prisons responsible for a rapidly growing population of older people, yet to date it remains largely overlooked. The last decade has seen increasing academic interest in the impact of this demographic shift on a criminal justice systems designed to house younger people, however the issue of dementia has attracted little attention. The aims of this report are to scope existing research on treating and managing male offenders with cognitive impairment to identify and share examples of good practice employed by a handful of prisons around the globe.

The study involved three phases of data collection including: Phase 1 - a survey of school children aged 13-14, Phase 2 - focus groups with 69 young people aged 13-19, and Phase 3 - life history interviews with 30 young men, aged 16-21, who had experienced domestic violence as victims, perpetrators or witnesses.

Adfam: Discussion Paper on funding Family Support

In May 2010, the Coalition Government stated that deficit reduction was the most urgent issue facing Britain, aiming to save £20 billion per year by the end of the current Parliament in 2015. There is also evidence that these budgetary cuts are being implemented unevenly, and in some areas are disproportionately affecting the voluntary sector: roughly two-thirds of reported cuts identified Local Government as a source of funding. Even in areas that are highly supportive of the voluntary sector, the trend of increasing investment from the state has gone, perhaps permanently. To compound this, voluntary and charitable organisations have recently experienced a reduction in giving and donating from the public, which dropped 20% (or £2.3 billion) in real terms between 2010/11 and 2011/12.

NI child abuse levels 'disturbing' says NSPCC report

Fewer children are suffering violent deaths in Northern Ireland but the level of child abuse remains disturbing and often "hidden", according to a new report. The report, How Safe are our Children, found that for every child in the UK subject to a protection plan or on child protection registers, eight more have suffered maltreatment. The charity estimates it would cost up to £0.5bn every year to provide protection plans to just a quarter of these "hidden children". The report, a UK-wide study, stresses the need for early intervention.

Brighton considers drug-use rooms in bid to reduce deaths

Brighton could become the first city in the UK to provide rooms where people would be able to use illegal drugs safely without the fear of prosecution. Their use is one of the recommendations in an independent report commissioned by Brighton and Hove City Council. (bbc news) Sussex Police welcomed the report but emphasised the importance of a "holistic approach" to illegal drugs.

- The employment rate for those aged from 16 to 64 for December 2012 to February 2013 was 71.4%, virtually unchanged from September to November 2012. There were 29.70 million people in employment aged 16 and over, little changed (down 2,000) from September to November 2012.
- The unemployment rate for December 2012 to February 2013 was 7.9% of the economically active population, up 0.2 percentage points from September to November 2012. There were 2.56 million unemployed people, up 70,000 from September to November 2012.
- The inactivity rate for those aged from 16 to 64 for December 2012 to February 2013 was 22.2% (the lowest since 1991), down 0.2 percentage points from September to November 2012. There were 8.95 million economically inactive people aged from 16 to 64, down 57,000 from September to November 2012.

Between December 2011 to February 2012 and December 2012 to February 2013 total pay rose by 0.8% (the lowest growth rate since September to November 2009) and regular pay rose by 1.0% (the lowest growth rate since records began in 2001).

The Regulation Committee is open-minded about exactly how its objectives should best be achieved, and this document is designed to start a period of intensive dialogue with the sector. This will lead to a formal consultation on changes to the Regulatory Framework later this year which will address any statutory consultation requirements that arise from proposed amendments to the Framework. The feedback over the next eight weeks will determine the form and length of the formal consultation.
