NAO publishes report on Home Office oversight of forensic services

On 21 January, the National Audit Office published a briefing for the Commons Science and Technology Committee on Home Office oversight of forensic services. The report states that the data available publicly on forensics spending is limited. The information that is available is incomplete, inconsistent and/or difficult to access. The Home Office collects a range of data on forensic services procured externally by police forces through the national forensic framework but has very little data on forensic services procured by police forces outside of the framework. The report also says that police forces are undertaking more forensics work internally and this could undermine the market, the forensic science regulator has no statutory powers to enforce compliance with quality standards and the Home Office has not produced a strategy for forensics.

Emergency Services Lot 4 network contract removed

The Home Office announced the removal of the contract for a national 'extension to mobile services'.

3. Developments and reports

PAC report on Managing and removing foreign national offenders

The number of foreign nationals in prison has stayed at around 10,000, and the number of foreign national offenders removed from the UK peaked at 5,613 in 2008–09 and has not matched that level since. The figure fell to 4,539 in 2011–12 and it remains below the peak levels. This is just not good enough. "Furthermore, as of March 2014 there were still 4,247 foreign national offenders in the community post sentence awaiting removal, and of these around 1 in 6 – 758 – had absconded. 151 foreign national offenders have been released without even being considered for deportation at all since 2009, and the Department was forced to pay out £6.2m in compensation payments to 229 foreign national offenders because of Home Office delays in dealing with cases since April 2012 – that is an average of £27,000 each.

Younger drivers still need to take heed of drink-drive dangers says ACPO

Younger drivers remain proportionally more likely than their over-25 counterparts to fail a breath-test for driving under the influence, the UK's national lead for roads policing has said. Chief Constable Suzette Davenport was speaking as she released the national figures for the December 2014 anti-drink-and-drug-driving campaign, run by forces under the auspices of the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Brake echoes police calls warning young people of dangers of drink and drug driving

Brake, the road safety charity, has praised police for their efforts to catch drink and drug drivers over the festive period but has expressed concern that a significant minority of drivers – especially among the younger age group – are continuing to endanger lives. An increasingly intelligence-led approach by officers resulted in fewer breath tests this year, down to 133,996, but a higher rate of drivers testing positive, with 5,885, or 4.39%, failing breath tests according to figures released by the Association of Chief Police Officers.
