2. RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT AND STATISTICS

Crime in England and Wales 2017/18 – published 19 July 2018

Latest estimates from the Crime Survey for England and Wales show a non-significant (+3.8%) increase in overall crime against adults between 2016/17 and 2017/18 – following a period of long term decline since 1995. Notable increases were recorded, however, among a number of serious crime types including:-

- Offences involving knives or sharp instruments recorded by police (+16%) and NHS (+14%)
- Offences involving firearms recorded by police (+2%) – although improvements in recording may be a factor
- Homicides recorded by the police (+12%) having continued the upward trend seen since 2013/14. It should be noted, however, that homicides remain rare and heavily concentrated in metropolitan areas
- Vehicle-related thefts recorded by the Crime Survey (+17%) and police
- Burglary (+6%) and robbery (+30%) offences recorded by the police, particularly in metropolitan areas

The Crime Survey did, however, also show significant reductions in computer misuse crimes (-31%), largely driven by a decrease in computer viruses. Data available at police force and CSP level

Crime Outcomes 2017/18 – published 19 July 2018

Police forces closed 48% of offences with no suspect being identified in 2017/18, however this varied by crime type with 75% of theft offences and 7% of rape offences being closed with no suspect identified. 9% of offences resulted in a charge or summons, marking a 2% point reduction compared to the previous year. The proportion of offences that did not progress due to evidential difficulties increased by 3% points to 29% due, in part, to improvements in the level of crime recorded. The proportion of domestic abuse-related crimes assigned a charge or summons decreased from 18% to 15%, while the proportion of these crimes not progressed on account of evidential difficulties rose from 41% to 48%. Force data available

Police Workforce, England and Wales as at 31 March 2018 – Published 19 July 2018

Home Office statistics show no significant change (+0.5%) in the overall full-time equivalent police workforce in the last year, with a total of 122,404 Police officers (-0.6%), 62,820 Police staff (+2.9%), 10,139 PCSOs (-0.7%) and 4,380 Designated officers (+3.0%). The total number of FTE Special Constables fell by 13.4% to 11,690. Police Officer numbers have continued to fall to the lowest level since comparable records began in 1996 and, though not strictly comparable, the lowest level since 1981. New joiners accounted for 5.7% of all officers in 2017/18, while the proportion of officers leaving the police (6.1%) has seen a continued increase since 2012/13. The proportion of officers in frontline roles (92-93%) has remained relatively stable since 2013, despite a 1.6% reduction in absolute numbers over the previous year. The number of officers employed within local policing functions, fell by 4.6%. The proportion of female officers (30%) and officers from Black and Minority Ethnic backgrounds (7%) has reached the highest level since records began, however representation remains low when compared to their demographic composition in England and Wales. Long term absence rates for police officers remained stable at 2%. Comparative data available at police force level.

Commissioner's e-Briefing: 23 July 2018

Police funding for England and Wales 2015 to 2019 – Published 17 July 2018

Home Office publishes detailed breakdown of police funding year ending March 2016 to year ending March 2019 and details of the difficulties in comparing between spending review periods. The report highlights that overall police funding increased by £468m between 2017-18 and 2018-19, primarily driven by a £281m increase in police precept income. Comparative data available at police force level.

Policing and young adults: developing a tailored approach – 17 July 2018

Police Foundation report highlighting the overrepresentation of young adults in the criminal justice system and growing body of research showing that many have not yet reached the full maturity - which can lead them to engage in risky behaviours. The report describes the current approach in policing to dealing with people aged 18 to 25 and argues the case for taking a more tailored approach.

The experience of electronic monitoring and implications for practice – 12 July 2018

Ministry of Justice study considers how electronic monitoring (EM) can be used most effectively to achieve best outcomes, including compliance, rehabilitation and desistance. The study notes that EM on its own is unlikely to bring about compliance beyond the period of monitoring and not everyone experiences benefits.

The demand for and use of illicit phones in prison – 19 July 2018

Ministry of Justice study concludes that mobile phones are viewed by prisoners and staff as a feature of prison life across the custodial estate, although rarer in both women's prisons and among the youngest prisoners. Significant criminal drivers for the trafficking and use of mobile phones within prisons were identified, but so too were social communication factors and the desire to stay in touch with family and friends.

Understanding the process and experience of recall to prison – 19 July 2018

Ministry of Justice summary of four studies highlights that recalled prisoners have high levels of risk and need, and complex responsivity issues, with many suitable for cognitive skills and violence interventions. In interviews and surveys, recalled prisoners described their recall as unjust and found it hard to trust the process. Some felt stranded and confused about what was expected of them. For women, the period immediately before and after their initial release emerged as the time of particular vulnerability. The findings emphasise the need to refine recall and re-release processes to include better communication and relationships between those involved.

3. AUDITS AND INSPECTIONS

HMICFRS policing inspection programme and framework 2018/19 published – 12 July 2018

Inspection plan includes ongoing focus on counter-terrorism, child protection and crime data integrity alongside thematic inspections of the police response to hate crime, fraud, older people in the CJS, cybercrime and county lines, and follow up work on victims of so-called honour-based abuse, forced marriage and female genital mutilation; and modern slavery and human trafficking.

Understanding the Difference: The police's initial response to hate crime – 19 July 2018

HMICFRS inspection report highlights failures within some forces to correctly flag hate incidents and crimes, gather comprehensive data about hate crime victims and consistently refer hate crime victims for support. The inspection also found that police forces have worked hard to raise awareness of hate crime among staff and communities, and made concerted efforts to promote reporting opportunities. It also highlights some positive examples of innovative practice in Gwent, Greater Manchester and West Yorkshire. The report also highlights, however, that a consistent level of training is still required to support officers and staff and enable them to respond appropriately to victims.

Commissioner's e-Briefing: 23 July 2018

HMICFRS Inspection of the National Crime Agency – 12 July 2018

Fourth inspection of the National Crime Agency's national tasking, coordination and governance of the response to serious and organised crime concludes that the NCA has effective and efficient processes in place, but makes a number of recommendations to enhance the existing arrangements. These include improvements in the quality and level of information shared across some agencies.

HMCPSP Area Assurance programme 2016-2018 – 13 July 2018

HMCPSP's composite report of the findings from the Area Assurance Programme inspections in 2016-18 highlights that the majority of Areas are led and managed effectively. Staff engagement has been positive and CPS values were being actively promoted by senior managers. Relationships with stakeholders have also been positive, with good examples of joint working with other criminal justice agencies. Inspectors identified some issues with the distribution of resources, as well as the recruitment and retention of staff in some of the regions.

4. REVIEWS AND INQUIRIES

The scale and drivers of attrition in reported fraud and cyber-crime – 16 July 2018

Home Office publish a report and summary slide pack on research examining attrition in fraud and cyber-crime cases reported to Action Fraud, analysed by the National Fraud Intelligence Bureau and disseminated to police. Key stages of attrition highlighted by the report include:-

- Reporting to Action Fraud – largely due to difficulties the general public have in completing the Action Fraud crime reporting form and providing good quality, reliable and timely information about the crime
- Identifying cases most likely to have viable lines for enquiry – the automated scoring matrix and 'manual review' process (based on severity / impact of the crime) is not working as well as intended. This should be improved to ensure Crime Reviewers to focus their limited resources on cases likely to be disseminated
- Dissemination to local forces and other agencies – there remains confusion in forces about who is responsible for investigating these crimes and concerns about the quality and amount of information disseminated. The process can also involve forces double-keying information
- Crimes receiving an outcome from local police forces – often forces do not return outcome information on a regular and consistent basis and for evidence suggest that, for many, fraud is not a high priority

Commission for Countering Extremism sets out plans for coming months – 11 July 2018

CCE sets out plans to publish a comprehensive study into all forms of extremism, build a network of counter extremists and establish a robust commission to make recommendations about its future structure.

Victims' Commissioner's Annual Report 2017/18 – 19 July 2018

Victims' Commissioner Annual Report highlights the need to better support children by improving the registered intermediary service, and implement the interim recommendations of the Independent Inquiry into Child Sexual Support. The report also makes further calls for for the Victim's Law to be brought forward to provide victims with a seamless journey through the criminal justice system and for the National Probation Service and PCCs to forge closer integration of their victim services. The Commissioner also commits to undertaking a review into criminal injuries compensation and to examine the support given to victims of anti-social behaviour.

Illicit Trade in the UK – Report published 17 July 2018

All Party Parliamentary Group on Illicit Trade report highlights the lack of a unified, national approach to the issue and the need to also change consumers' perspectives of illicit trade. The inquiry found a lack of robust enforcement, at the border and local level and a paucity of prosecutions. The report proposes the establishment of a UK Anti-Illicit Trade Group and calls for the appointment of a UK national lead to co-ordinate work and involvement of law enforcement and government departments.
