Damian Green speech on excellence in policing

Speech given by Damian Green at the ACPO Excellence in Policing in Ryton. "The old ways of ticking the boxes for the targets are gone. I want the police to be responsive to the needs and desires of the people you serve, not Whitehall whims. Cutting costs is good, it is other people's money you, and I, spend. But that is not the 'point' of our policing reforms. Police have to use their judgment, good judgement, all the time. That judgment – whether to arrest or caution for a low-level vehicle crime, or whether someone caught cycling on a pavement needs a telling-off or a fixed penalty notice – is always crucial and always builds towards the one overriding aim of cutting crime. Officers must judge what the right thing to do is, but of course always within the confines of the law."
